Come hither have, and read with me
This journal of my youthful days,
Where I have written, as you see,
So many lines in Beauty's praise.
So many lines of early love
Inspired by these bewitching things
Who round my heart wright fetters wore,
Dear angels all except the wires. Dear angels, all except the wings!

Bee, here's a verse to Mary's eyes, In truth they had a witching beam, And cost me many a score of sight.

And many a wild and fevered dream!-And here's to Laura's levely brow,

Appeared in characters of snow.

As if he faire fingers wrought; And clustering in heauty there Each ringles of her golden hair Wanld mind you of the sun's own heam Rissing the foam of mountain stream And here's to sweet, young Rosalie,

A lovelier thing you'll scarcely see;
A gentler spirit ne'er hal birth
Up a this lone and desert earth.
This desolate, deserted clod,
Which lone hath wandered from its God... This foot-hall for the devil's play. Where every fair thing fades away ! Young Rosaliz is sleeping now Under von willow's weeping bough, Some violets are on her grave,

Some lilies o'er it gently wave, And song of bird, and hum of bee Are round thee ever, Resalie! But see, my love, what gentle sprite Is this which I have pictured here? With form ethereal and light, And eyes like heaven, blue and clear...

Those lovely eyes, whose every fix h Is tempered by the long, dark lash, Which on that gentle check of rose Li a slumbering in sweet tep-se, As if earth's fairest, softest thing. Were shadow'd by the raven's wing And that pale beaw. Redection's dome,
Thought's dwelting place, and Beauty's house!
Canst thou not guess the form divine?
Thy bla-hes speak,—'no thine, 'tis thine!

The form, the face, the very tone Of that sweet voice, all thise own; Each witching charm, each gentle grace Is glowing still in form and face, All bright, all beautiful, as when In that seque-tered m-untain glen, Six summers since, my b-unding beart To thee its passion did impart, And read in that soft, tearful eye.
